Award for Outstanding Scholar-Athlete

2018/2019 Application

About James Ralph “Shug” Jordan

Chi/Auburn 1932

James Ralph “Shug” Jordan is best known for serving as the head football coach at his alma mater, Auburn University, from 1951 to 1975 and for leading Auburn to a national championship in 1957. Auburn’s football stadium bears his name.

Born in Selma, AL on Sept. 25, 1910, Brother Jordan was known to his friends simply as “Shug” for his love of sugar cane. As a student in the late 1920s and early 1930s, he was a three-sport athlete and a leader in many campus organizations. In addition to his fraternity involvement, he served as treasurer of his senior class, was a member of Blue Key, and a member of Spades – an organization which is composed of the ten most prominent and influential members of the senior class at Auburn.

Jordan fought in World War II as a combat engineer and officer in the United States Army, and he participated in the invasions of North Africa, Sicily, Italy, and France. During the invasion of Normandy on D-Day, Jordan was wounded but chose to stay with his men, refusing evacuation to a hospital ship. He received the Purple Heart and the Bronze Star for his service in the war.

During his coaching career, his reputation among sportsmen grew to great heights, and he touched the lives of many colleagues and players. The following excerpt, taken from the 1993 book Shug: The Life and Times of Auburn’s Ralph “Shug” Jordan by Rich Donnell, summarizes Brother Jordan’s career:

Jeff Beard, Auburn’s athletic director from 1951 to 1972, and one of the men most responsible for hiring Jordan as head coach in 1951, marveled at Jordan’s record and career. Few coaches in the history of college football can match Jordan’s accomplishments. But Beard also said of his close friend Shug: “His record doesn’t speak for him as a man.”

His 1957 team won the national championship with a 10-0 record. Thirteen times, Jordan’s teams finished in the Associated Press top twenty, seven times in the top ten, and four times in the top five. Jordan produced a Heisman Trophy winner in 1971 in quarterback Pat Sullivan, and an Outland Trophy winner in 1958 - guard Zeke Smith. Twenty-two players made first-team All-American during the Jordan era. Of his twenty-five Auburn teams, twenty-two had winning records.

Beard’s comment about Jordan - that even his sterling record didn’t match the greatness of the man - was not meant to minimize Jordan’s numbers on the field or the honors he achieved. Certainly 176 victories, which places Jordan high on the all-time win list ahead of such greats as General Bob Neyland, Wallace Wade and Bobby Dodd, are not to be understated; nor are Jordan’s four SEC Coach of the Year awards (1953, 1957, and 1972, as given by the Associated Press; and 1963 by United Press International).

According to Beard, Jordan the man was bigger than the game – that the makeup of Jordan’s character impacted his peers and players long after the final horn had sounded.

In honor of Brother Jordan, Auburn’s football stadium was re-named Jordan-Hare Stadium in 1973, making it the first stadium in the United States to be named after an active coach. He was posthumously inducted into the National Football Hall of Fame in 1982.

About the Jordan Award

The James Ralph "Shug" Jordan Award was commissioned by the Grand Chapter to honor one collegiate scholar-athlete of the Fraternity each year who exemplifies the qualities of leadership, citizenship, brotherhood, and who represents a commitment to excellence in intercollegiate athletics.

The Shug Jordan Award is a nomination process. This means that the form should be filled out by someone other than the nominee. Letters of recommendation, as well as supporting materials, may be attached as needed. This is an opportunity for chapters, colonies, and interest groups to nominate a brother who has demonstrated the qualities of leadership, commitment to the ideals and values of Theta Chi, and loyalty to alma mater both on and off the athletic field.

All collegiate members of Theta Chi that are involved in varsity athletics are eligible to be nominated for the award. Members who are graduating this spring are eligible. Nominees must have participated in a varsity sport for the institution during the 2017/2018 academic school year.

During non-Convention years (odd years), the "Shug" Jordan Award will be presented to the winner at a local campus, chapter, or regional event by a member of the Grand Chapter or someone designated by the Grand Chapter. The winner will be invited to the next Convention. Any runner(s)-up to the Jordan Award will be recognized by an official family member at a campus or chapter event. The runner(s)-up will be invited to attend the next Convention at his own expense.
