Nearly every year since our founding, the men of Iota Sigma chapter of Delta Tau Delta have been chosen by a sorority to be homecoming partners in the various events and activities that take place throughout the week. For many college students, not just at NDSU, homecoming week is considered to be a time for drinking and social activities. While it is a time for celebration and school spirit, the ease and comfort of our sorority partner is always at the forefront of our thoughts. At the start of Homecoming week, the men of Iota Sigma came together with the women of Kappa Delta Sorority for valuable educational conversations and discussion on various topics including alcohol awareness, holding your brothers/sisters accountable, and sexual misconduct/consent.

Our chapter has had no issues or allegations when it comes to sexual misconduct in the past and we are continually striving to ensure that it stays that way. On many campuses, students associate certain Greek letters with a certain type of man. The founders of Iota Sigma recognized this and firmly established a belief that if a young woman were walking through campus late at night and saw the letters DTD, she would know that they were men of sound character and that she could go to them if she needed anything or felt unsafe. We work each and every semester to uphold this image and really enjoyed the conversations that came from our educational discussion with the women of Kappa Delta. Iota Sigma had 25 members in attendance and Kappa Delta had 37.

Discussions like this are done as an educational and preventive measure. Through the bid process, Iota Sigma strives to only select men of sound character who only display honorable conduct. These types of conversations, although not prompted by an act of misconduct, are always beneficial to serve as a friendly reminder of expectations, accountability, and maintaining precedent.
